Brian Hatton

History - Teacher's notes Theme - 'The Lost Generation'

Introduction

Brian Hatton died in the First World War aged 28, on 23rd April 1916, at the Battle of Oghratina in Egypt, where he had been sent to fight the Turkish forces that had joined the central powers (Germany Austro-Hungary and Bulgaria) in 1914. Volunteering in the heat of battle to ride for help from the nearby Gloucester Regiment, Brian disappeared into the desert and was never seen again. His body was found months later. In his wallet was a tiny photograph of his wife.

From an early age, Brian Hatton showed a keen interest in horses in action. The first image, 'The Tournament', demonstrates his remarkable observation of horses and armour. Many of his early drawings and paintings were influenced by the stories of King Arthur and his knights, Walter Scott and Byron, so reflect scenes of conflict.

On the 4th September 1914, Brian joined the Worcester Yeomanry as a trooper. During his time in the army, Brian produced several pieces of work including, 'Civilisation', 'Scene in the Café Royale', 'Advance Guard Patrolling a Road' and 'Signalling, Enemy in Sight'. These continued to reflect his fascination with horses. Most of these were completed using charcoal, black ink and white gouache with a grey wash. Why do you think that might be?

The young men who volunteered to fight for their country had little idea of what lay before them, yet within days or weeks of reaching the front line they had experienced the realities of war.

Title of Artwork: 'Civilisation'

Brian drew this in 1915, before he went into active service. It was based on accounts he must have heard, in spite of censorship. It was very different from the works he had produced before. He may have wanted to offer this to a newspaper, but it is unlikely that a picture showing so clearly the stark horrors of war would have been printed.

During the First World War, 908,371 soldiers from the British Empire were killed in action, or died of their injuries or disease. These countries included Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and India. Approximately 750,000 of these men were from Great Britain. The men who died in this war became known as 'The Lost Generation'.

Population data on Great Britain and Ireland

To the men who fought in the army between 1914 and 1918, the war was known as The Great War. It is only in retrospect that it was called the First World War. The war lasted for four years and was ended by the Armistice at 11 o'clock on November 11th, 1918, (11am/11/11/18)

A month before the outbreak of war the population of Great Britain and Ireland was officially estimated at 46,089,249. By 1921, it had fallen to 42,769,196. Families the length and breadth of the country lost loved ones or knew those who had. There are only six villages in the whole of Great Britain that do not have a memorial to those lost in this war. Returning from the war, men believed the words of the Prime Minister, Lloyd George, that they were coming home to 'a land fit for heroes.' Sadly, for many, their hopes were quickly shattered. The National Debt had risen ten times and there was now a sharp increase in taxation. Following a short-lived boom the country fell into an economic decline.

Activity 1 - Newspaper article

Read the newspaper article below from the BBC Hereford and Worcester's First World War site, which reflects the impact of the conflict on one individual. http://www.bbc.co.uk/herefordandworcester/content/articles/2008/11/11/ww1_i ohn_gittins_feature.shtml

War, Madness and Murder, by John Gittins

I have an interesting story about my great uncle, Frank Haynes, who lived at Dunley and was in the Worcester Yeomanry. He spent some time at Gallipoli and Oghratina, where the Yeomanry were wiped out, and Frank taken prisoner. On his return home, his mother had recently passed away, his young brother had died from an epileptic fit, and another brother had been killed in action one week before the end of the war. He lived with another brother, trying to find what agricultural work was available. He suffered serious delusions, and rarely slept, and made serious accusations about villagers. This culminated in taking his brother's shotgun and shooting two men on their way home from the Dog Inn (where he had previously lived). He was found guilty of murder, but insane, and spent his remaining years in

He was found guilty of murder, but insane, and spent his remaining years in Broadmoor hospital. For many years the story was a big family secret - all I had to go on was memories of people sending food parcels to Broadmoor and a photo of Frank in the Worcester Yeomanry. The rest involved searching newspaper articles, with a lead from Broadmoor hospital and reading the history of the Worcester Yeomanry.

Activity 2 - My own newspaper article

Choose one of the following themes and write a short newspaper article. Give it your own headline.

- My family in the First World War
- How is the First World War recorded and remembered in our locality?

You will need to research using:

- Your local library
- Local history societies in your area
- Local War memorials and graves
- Family and local community
- Relevant web sites, http://www.bromyardhistorysociety.org.uk/

Whilst writing your article think about:

- The beginning sentences
- Have you answered these questions! Who? What? When? Where? Why?
- Using quotations
- Illustrations
- Spell checking
- Asking a friend to proof read your article

Extension activity: War graves

You may wish to have a list of relevant individuals from the locality for the pupils to investigate.

Research the grave of someone from your own, or friend's family, who has died in battle, using the Commonwealth War Graves commission site.
